

MUSIC

Music is a subject with many transferable skills and here at St John Rigby College, we have numerous links with other institutions such as the Royal Northern College of Music, Manchester University, York University, Edge Hill University, Birmingham Conservatoire, Salford University and BIMM to name a few.

Specific course entry requirements

College entry plus either:

- GCSE Music (minimum grade 4)
- Grade 5 in an instrument
- Grade 5 in music theory
- Related experience of music inside or outside of school
- By audition

Introduction

The course at SJR allows all students to achieve their full potential and is part of an outstanding department in an outstanding College. Music at St John Rigby College includes studies in performance and composition, alongside analytical exploration of Western Classical Music, Music for Media, and Contemporary Traditional Music.

All students are offered individual lessons on their primary instrument with outstanding peripatetic musicians employed in the department for the study of performance practice.

How will I be assessed?

Performance and composition are both practical assessments. Performance accounts for 30% of your final mark, and composition accounts for another 30%. 40% of your grade is from a two-hour examination at the end of year 2.

What will I study?

Within performance, students will create and perform a recital of eleven minutes of music on their chosen instrument(s). The recital will be at the end of the second year with weekly performances and instrumental lessons to help build towards this throughout your time at College.

Composition will include one piece of music that you will write yourself and a technical study paper. Work for this unit is supported by one-to-one tuition and composition masterclasses.

In music analysis, you will be asked to listen to, and analyse, a range of instrumental and vocal music from different genres and traditions. You will write stylistic analyses of musical works based on both studied scores and unseen pieces.

Where will this course lead me?

Due to the transferable skills that music offers, it is a highly regarded course for Higher Education institutions. Students progress to study Music and Music Technology at university and many are invited to apply for a conservatoire for further study of this specialist subject. Through our Maestro Programme, we work in partnership with many prestigious universities as well as the Royal Northern College of Music and Birmingham Conservatoire.

Other career pathways from studying music-related courses have included:

History, Management, Digital Marketing, Cosmology, Engineering, Computing Forensics, Music Therapy, Veterinary Nursing and Pharmaceutical Science.

Students have gone on to study at Salford, Derby, Huddersfield, Edge Hill, Bath, York, the London School of Music Theatre, Guildford, and Birmingham.